Tour of the Healing Arts Exhibition at the National Museum of African Art

Across the vast and diverse African continent specialized individuals draw upon their depth of knowledge to create works of art empowered to counter physical, social, and spiritual problems. These paintings and sculptures from the permanent collection reveal the skill and range of Africa's artists who use diverse materials and expressive styles to craft works of art that might contain medicines, draw upon the power of the divine, or address such global issues as the HIV/AIDS crisis.

In examining these works of art, consider how artists link the sacred and the secular, the human and the natural worlds, to explore the intersections of medicinal knowledge, power, and creative expression. How do the ideas explored in works of African art connect to your own experience?

Cost: FREE, limited to members and their guests

When: Sunday, May 7, 10:30am - 11:30am

Where: National Museum of African Art, 950 Independence Ave, SW, Washington, DC 20560

A Dinner Conversation on French Gardens with Vanessa Badré

What is the spirit of the French formal garden, the famous type of garden that inspired all of seventeenth century? Geometrical lines imposing order to nature reveal a vision of the world where man is "master and owner of nature" as French philosopher René Descartes wrote. The garden is a microcosm that expresses the desire of an everlasting power.

Biography of Vanessa Badré: Mme. Badré is an art historian and sought after lecturer here and abroad. A graduate of the prestigious Paris Institute of Political Science (Sciences Po) and a trained attorney, Vanessa Badré has made a second career as an art historian. She holds an M.A. from La Sorbonne. Her research currently focuses on the relationship between art and law during the 16th and 17th centuries. She has been a guest speaker at the Hirschhorn Museum, the Phillips Collection, and the Tsing Hua University in Beijing, China.

During that time, she has held various roles, from Liaison to the Department of Athletics to the Director of Transfer Admissions, logging many miles across the US – from Wyoming to Washington – recruiting students for Harvard. Gallery Chat with Candace Kaller '79, Owner of Kaller Fine Arts

"By the book" is a visual encounter with a written art form under attack. Books have become the latest casualty in our culture's war on words, on what words mean, and how we use and imbibe them to acquire knowledge. The show's eight artists utilize discarded books to create two- and three- dimensional art pieces whose unifying thread is an appreciation for the touch, smell, visual and intellectual heft of the printed word.

Kaller Fine Arts, voted in 2015 by Bethesda Magazine as interior designers' favorite local art resource, has been one of Washington's best-kept art secrets since its establishment in 2004.

Cost: $15 for members and their guests, $25 for non-members

When: Saturday, June 3, 4:00pm - 6:00pm

Where: Kaller Fine Arts, 3731 Chesapeake St, NW, Washington, DC 20016

Inventing Utamaro: A Japanese Masterpiece Rediscovered

For the first time in nearly 140 years, these paintings reunite in Inventing Utamaro at the Arthur M. Sackler Gallery, the only location to show all three original pieces.

African Mosaic: 50th Anniversary Room at the National Museum of African Art

In 1963, during the height of the civil rights movement, retired U.S. Foreign Service officer Warren M. Robbins (1923–2008) established the Center for Cross Cultural Understanding to “show the rich creative heritage of Africa, and to underscore the implications of this heritage in America’s quest for interracial understanding.” The following year, Robbins expanded his vision and opened the National Museum of African Art. Originally housed in a Capitol Hill town house once owned by the great intellectual, abolitionist, former slave, and statesman, Frederick Douglass, the museum became part of the Smithsonian Institution in 1979 by an act of Congress and was renamed the National Museum of African Art.

Join us for a docent-led tour. Registration is required.

Cost: FREE, limited to members and their guests

When: Saturday, June 10, 10:30am - 11:30am

Where: National Museum of African Art, 950 Independence Ave, SW, Washington, DC 20560
